reflections on power and solidarity in BIPOC archives
Printed in March 2022.

This zine is distributed under a Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-ShareAlike 4.0 International (CC BY-NC-SA 4.0) license.

You may share or adapt this work for noncommercial purposes so long as credit is given to the creator, and adaptations are shared under the same terms.

Read the full license at: https://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc-sa/4.0/
We would like to extend our deepest gratitude to our working group facilitator, Krystal Appiah. Krystal, thank you for your guidance, support, and organizational skills in helping our working group actualize our goals.

We would also like to thank Rare Book School staff members Barbara Heritage, Marian Toldeo Candelaria, and Danielle Culpepper, as well as the Andrew W. Mellon Fellowship for Diversity, Inclusion & Cultural Heritage advisory board members Cheryl Beredo, Trevor James Bond, Bethany Nowviskie, Sandra Phoenix, Monika Rhue, Curtis Small, and Martin Tsang.
This zine was co-sponsored by the Andrew W. Mellon Fellowship for Diversity, Inclusion & Cultural Heritage at Rare Book School.

Funding allowed for 50 printed zines to be distributed to each fellow to share freely. A free digital copy of this zine (as well as an unabridged version) is also available for viewing or printing on the Rare Book School website.

In addition, we will be hosting a virtual, live symposium about our project on March 23, 2022. A recording of that presentation will be available for viewing on the Rare Book School Youtube page.
Both the zine and symposium were organized by members of the 2021-2022 RBS Mellon Fellowship Outreach Working Group, including:

Zayda Delgado †
Jina DuVernay †
Sandy Enriquez *
Suzanne Im *
Amanda Moreno †
Jhensen Ortiz †
Bridgett Pride *
Keala Richard *
Jessica Tai *
Krystal Tribbett †

* Team Zine † Team Symposium
TABLE OF CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Acknowledgments</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Contributors</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>About this zine</td>
<td>8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Solidaridad. Resistencia. Libertad.</td>
<td>11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by Amanda Moreno</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cuban Heritage Collection</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>University of Miami Libraries</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Claudia Jones Memorial Collection</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by Bridgett Kathryn Pride</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Schomburg Center Manuscripts, Archives, and</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rare Books Division</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>New York Public Library</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
TABLE OF CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Author(s)</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Reflections on Addressing Inequity in Conservation</td>
<td>Keala Richard</td>
<td>15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Consequences and Coalition Building of Community Organizing:</td>
<td>Krystal Tribbett</td>
<td>17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Case of Frank Shuford</td>
<td>OC &amp; SEAA Archives Center</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Banners of Resistance: Dominican Day Parade early 1980s</td>
<td>Jhensen Ortiz</td>
<td>19</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aché: An “Integral Communication Vehicle” for the Black Lesbian Community</td>
<td>Jessica Tai</td>
<td>21</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

6
TABLE OF CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Japanese Community &amp; Industry in Sonoma County</td>
<td>23</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by Zayda Delgado</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sonoma County Library</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Finding Power in Foodways: The Los Angeles Chapter of the KDP</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by Suzanne Im</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Digitization &amp; Special Collections</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Los Angeles Public Library</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;We Will Unite:&quot; Remembering Jesse Salcido</td>
<td>27</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by Sandy Enrique</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Special Collections &amp; University Archives, University of California, Riverside</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Remembering Journalism Pioneer Almena Lomax</td>
<td>29</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by Jina DuVernay</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stuart A. Rose Manuscript, Archives, and Rare Book Library</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Emory University</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>References Documenting Resistance</td>
<td>31</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
We created this zine to give insight into unique collections in our current and former institutions that embody the theme of resistance. As library and archives professionals, we understand that what we preserve reflects who we are as a people. As people of color, we want to see that reflection both diversified and dignified.

We hope that in spotlighting these collections, we can drive more research interest and in turn, contribute to a more inclusive historical narrative that honors what our subjects fought for.
In addition, we chose to create a zine to challenge the perception that archives are only functional for traditional research purposes. Although research is a primary goal of archives, so should be community building and dialogue, which can emerge not only from academic papers or books, but also art, poetry, zines, and more.

Zines have long been tools and platforms for underrepresented voices. Similarly, as library workers of color, we oftentimes occupy spaces that were never meant for us. Because of that, we hope this zine continues this anti-oppressive tradition of sharing information freely and widely, and encouraging others to find and connect to community whether in person or from afar.
reflections
The relationship between Cuba and the United States has been fraught since the early days of the Cuban Revolution and its attendant political and economic changes to life on the island that led to the mass exodus of over 1.3 million people since 1959. Most Cuban immigrants have settled in Miami. Their demographics and politics have changed over time. As the decades pass, their reasons for migrating have largely shifted from anti-communist political opposition to economic need.
Photographs of protests document a people’s resistance to injustice and authoritarianism, and the complicated connection between homeland and diaspora. The through line of these artifacts of resistance is the search for liberty and freedom, both on the island and in the diaspora, across politics and ideologies. Our documentation of these movements has shifted to not only include the visual image but also to preserve the digital traces of our lives shared online.
Claudia Jones (1915-1964) was a political activist, communist, journalist, and community leader who was born in Trinidad and immigrated to the U.S. in 1924 with her family. By using this collection, researchers can learn about Jones' activities as an advocate for human, civil, and women's rights.

Jones was denied U.S. Citizenship and was often threatened with deportation for being so outspoken on the subject of human rights, anti-racism, and equality. According to the United States courts, Jones used journalism as a tool for teaching and advocating for the violent overthrow of the U.S. government. This resulted in her spending months to years at a time incarcerated, causing her health to quickly deteriorate. Jones resisted injustice where she found it, even speaking out against the communist party for their internal racism and misogyny.
Indeed, in her dedicated work and leadership Claudia has given new life to the finest traditions of our country. She has continued in our day the heroic tradition of Harriet Tubman, of Sojourner Truth—the struggle for Negro liberation, for women's rights, for human dignity and fulfillment.

-Paul Robeson

Manuscripts, Archives, and Rare Books Division
"Claudia Jones Memorial Collection"
1. Objects that endure exist by deliberate choice, most often to preserve colonizer legacies, leaving marginalized communities neglected. As conservators and cultural heritage professionals, we make choices every day deciding which objects are deserving of precious limited financial and temporal resources. We can choose better. Invest in the preservation of multicultural collections to broaden the narrative of who we are and where we come from.

2. Legacies of inequity shape our identities as conservators. The face of conservation is a direct result of the traditional pathways into the profession. Years of expensive education followed by additional years of under or unpaid labor are required for the skill set. Conservators are impacted by socioeconomic inequity derived from power structures of the past. Who can afford to enter the profession is determined either by benefitting from or overcoming these historical inequities.
3. We can diversify the profession by decentralizing the way we approach the field. We can embrace the apprenticeship model that founded the profession, training up newcomers at the bench and offering a pathway to those for whom the established route is inaccessible. We must also invest in our people through professional development, paid internships, and retaining recruits with higher wages to prevent burnout.

4. We can respect traditional methods for repairs, uses, and the needs of our objects. Sensitivity to who has access to information or what impacts the cultural integrity of an object can help us make progress rectifying historical exploitation of the peoples represented in our collections, and the paternalistic approaches that permeate western treatment philosophy.

NOTE ON THE IMAGES: Both first editions of Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass and KKK: Friend or Foe? came to my bench on the same day. At first glance, the second book seemed a monstrous waste of resources, until I found the ephemeral news clipping tucked inside, condemning the book and the KKK. Preserving them together tells a story of contemporary resistance that could not be fully understood were they to be disassociated. I will treat all 3 items, but if we did not have the resources for all 3, which would you choose?
Santa Ana, California was the home and cultural hub of about 4% of Black Orange County residents in the 1960s and 1970s. Nicknamed, “Little Texas,” the Black Santa Ana community was vibrant with churches, clubs, beauty salons and barbershops, and barbecue restaurants, thriving in spite of the redlining that kept Black residents there.

In 1974, local Black community organizer Frank Shuford was accused of a non-fatal shooting that occurred while he was at home with friends and family. His first trial ended in a hung jury. At his second trial, an all-white jury convicted and sentenced him to 30 years in prison for assault with intent to commit murder. According to various accounts there was little evidence produced against Shuford at either trial, eye-witnesses were not called to the stand, one of the victims perjured himself, and Shuford's attorney in the second trial took a job as assistant district attorney for Orange County after his conviction.

Many believed Frank Shuford’s framing and conviction was an attempt by those in power in Orange County to attack the Black community and working class in the region, especially those who attempted to fight for independent political action and civil rights. It helped build coalitions and validated the need for justice.
Pamphlets, fliers and newsletters can share the history of political and social activism in a region. Those developed and disseminated in Orange County, California, offer a glimpse of lesser-known histories and activism involving the county's Black communities.

As director of the Community Youth Council, Frank organized hundreds of young people to bring about change in the community. For his work in providing free food and clothing programs, counseling programs and a prize-winning drill team, he received a letter of commendation from the mayor of Santa Ana.

He organized the young people against repression in the schools, police brutality and heroin traffic. It was after Frank began exposing heroin pushers that he was framed. Since he has been in prison, the young people of his community are no longer organized, and heroin has flooded into the community.

The Frank Shuford Defense Committee is a community-based organization, largely from Santa Ana, composed of Black and white people who are trying to win the freedom of a Black community organizer from Santa Ana who was framed in 1974 for a shooting he did not commit and is now imprisoned in San Quentin. Frank Shuford led the Community Youth Council in Santa Ana, which organized as many as several hundred young Blacks into community activities, tutoring and free lunch programs, a drill team, campaigns against police in the schools, and an attempt to drive the dope traffic out of Santa Ana.

"As for myself, I am surrounded by death yet I live with one thought: VICTORY AND FREEDOM FOR ALL OPPRESSED PEOPLE!"

The Committee has come to the aid of another Black man accused of a crime in Santa Ana, has sought to link up with other Defense Committees in Southern California, has attended a coalition against U.S. intervention in Angola, has given active support to the struggle against the harassment of undocumented Mexican workers, and, with the SOC, played an important role in organizing the demonstration against the South African Davis Cup team. In addition, political questions, raised by SOC and others, have been discussed within the committee. These include discussions of the working class, the oppression of women, the struggle for national liberation in the third world and the meaning of socialism.
At the start of the 1980s, Dominicans were one of the largest immigrant populations arriving in New York City, a migration movement from the Dominican Republic that began in 1961 after the death of dictator Rafael Trujillo. In the subsequent decades, the political and economic upheavals that unfolded increased the Dominican population in the city to over 200,000 people during the 1980s. In the twenty-first century, Dominicans in New York City have reached an unprecedented level in terms of its population and political influence. The official annual Dominican Day Parade has been celebrated on the second Sunday of August since 1982, remaining a milestone to this settled community’s ability to contest and claim public space in the city.
NORMANDIA MALDONADO (1929-2018)

was a co-founder of the Dominican Day parade whose collection is housed at the CUNY Dominican Studies Institute Archives. The collection documents the broad spectrum of organizations, and the Dominican population in general that participated in the first years of the parade in Manhattan’s Washington Heights neighborhood. These photographs represent some of the banners of solidarity the Dominican community was exhibiting in the parades during the early 1980s.
ACHÉ: AN “INTEGRAL COMMUNICATION VEHICLE” FOR THE BLACK LESBIAN COMMUNITY

by: Jessica Tai

Lisbet Tellefsen is an Oakland, California-based political activist, feminist, and community organizer.

In 1989, Tellefsen co-founded Aché with Pippa Fleming. Aché was a free journal and community organization for, by, and about Black lesbians and featured the work of Audre Lorde, Pat Parker, and Barbara Smith.

Aché played a major role in organizing, making visible, and creating alliances locally and internationally in the Bay Area Black lesbian and Black LGBTQ communities. Aché was the longest-running Black lesbian journal and was published from 1989 to 1993.
Tellefsen states that Aché was an “integral communication vehicle, it served as an important nexus for all things Black and gay.” The journal developed a following in upwards of 12 countries and published over 200 artists and writers, most of whom had never before appeared in print.

"The existence of Aché is a deep and satisfying joy to me. It is important that we support and organ of communication exploring the potentials of black lesbian communities."

Audre Lorde writer/activist
Japanese immigrants arrived in Sonoma County by the mid-1870s, finding employment in the apple orchards of Sebastopol, the vineyards of Santa Rosa, the chicken farms of Petaluma, the hop ranches of the Russian River valley, and the sawmills in the redwood forests near the coast. Photographs from Sonoma County Library.

School in Analy township, circa 1880
The Japanese community established roots in present-day Sebastopol. By the 1910s, the area had about 250 Japanese residents and owned at least 5 stores.

Gravenstein Apple Show, 1911
Beginning as seasonal workers, soon some leased or established their own apple orchards. The Shrine of Nanko was recreated at the second annual Gravenstein Apple Show.
Japanese Americans with flag down Bodega Avenue, 1939
In 1942, Sonoma County’s nearly 1000 residents were forcibly removed and incarcerated at the American concentration camp, Granada War Relocation Center, also known as Camp Amache.

Emmanji Buddhist Temple, 1965
Built for the Chicago World's Fair then rebuilt in Sebastopol, the Emmanji Buddhist Temple became a target for vandalism by anti-Japanese locals.

Issei Pioneer Night honoring first generation Japanese, 1958
Emmanji Temple still functions as a central community space.
One of the strengths of the Los Angeles Public Library's special collections is in the area of cookery, where one can find evidence of resistance through the joy of cooking across various BIPOC identities. One such cookbook was created in the 1970s by the Los Angeles chapter of the Katipunan ng mga Demokratikong Pilipino (KDP), known in English as the Union of Democratic Pilipinos. The KDP was founded by a large group of young Filipino American activists who met in the Santa Cruz mountains in 1973. For the next thirteen years, until it formally disbanded in 1986, the KDP organized Filipino Americans around anti-imperialist and anti-racist issues. They embraced the dual goal of establishing socialism in the U.S., as well as supporting the National Democratic Movement led by the Communist Party of the Philippines (CPP). A central part of the mission of the KDP was fighting the regime of Philippines dictator Ferdinand Marcos, who had established martial law when he seized power and repressed leftists and trade unionists in the Philippines.

Los Angeles-based KDP members explain, “It is only appropriate that a cookbook be dedicated to those who are the producers and preparers of food and all wealth--the working people of the world. Anak pawis means ‘workers’ in the Pilipino language, Tagalog. . . The purpose of our cookbook is to give people the opportunity to understand and appreciate the Pilipino culture better. Because of their historical interactions with other cultures, the Pilipinos have a variety of recipes and ingredients [that show] how culturally rich the country is.”
ANTONIA'S SQUID ADOBO

1 lb. squid (medium size)
5 cloves garlic, pounded
1 small onion, sliced
1/2 cup vinegar
2 cups water
2 tablespoons cooking oil
Soy sauce to taste
Pepper to taste
6-10 cherry tomatoes
1 tbsp. soy bean condiment

Wash and clean the squids very well. Put them in a saucepan (not aluminum) with the vinegar, pepper, soy sauce, and water. Cover and cook slowly until squids are tender. Saute' garlic, onion, soy bean, and tomatoes. Add drained squids. (Save juice). Add soy sauce and cook for 10 minutes. Add juice and cook for another 20 minutes.

Fancit Guisado #2

3 tbsp. oil
4 gloves garlic
1/2 cup boiled chicken
1/2 cup boiled shrimp, cut in long narrow strips
1/2 cup boiled pork, cut in long strips
1 cup shredded cabbage
3 tbsp. soy sauce
1 cup shrimp juice or chicken broth
1 lb. pkg. rice sticks or miki (noodles)
Lemon wedges
Salt and pepper to taste

Stir fry separately, garlic, onion, shrimps, pork, chicken, and ham. Set aside a portion of each for garnishing the dish. To the rest add soy sauce, shrimp juice and salt and pepper to taste. Cook for about 5 mins., then add the cabbage mixing well until cabbage is cooked. Blanche rice sticks or miki in boiling water for about 2 mins. and stir fry in oil. Then add to the mixture. Arrange on a platter and garnish with the previously set aside fried pork, chicken, shrimps, ham and wedges of lemon.
In the evening hours of February 22, 1969, Jesus Salcido Jr. was murdered... unarmed, and for no apparent reason (other than the fact that he was a chicano), [he] was shot to death by a member of the Riverside Police Department.

- The People's Voice, Feb 15, 1974

Published 5 years after his death, this excerpt from a grassroots newspaper demonstrates the legacy and impact that Jesus (Jesse) Salcido's death had on the Chicanx community of the Inland Empire (IE) in Southern California. I first came across Salcido's name in the Collection on Race, Ethnicity and Student Activism (UA 133) at UCR. Two flyers: one a call for an inquest, and the other an invite to a peace rally to help heal the community (see quote at right), resonated with me. This is a story that we, as people of color, are all too familiar with.

"We have been held back too long. We have seen the results of disunity reach its peak in the murdering of our children. Therefore, we will unite and will gain justice for a child."

Jesse Salcido. ♬
Salcido's death was a significant turning point for the local Chicanx community. When his death was deemed a 'justifiable homicide' after the inquest, the community (including UMAS, the United Mexican American Students at UCR) protested, as seen in the excerpt above from the student newspaper The Highlander.

A colleague at the public library greatly helped me in my research by tracking down news articles and connecting me with scholars working on documenting Latinx history in the IE. One scholar shared with me an unpublished manuscript written in 1973 by a Latinx graduate student at UCR, who cited Salcido's death as the catalyst to the formation of the first Riverside chapter of the Brown Berets. Thus, in remembering Jesse Salcido's story, we also honor the labor and care that others in the community have given to documenting these pivotal moments across our shared histories.
Almena Lomax was a civil rights activist, journalist, and founder of The Los Angeles Tribune. The Tribune, started by Ms. Lomax in 1941, served the city’s Black community between the 1940s and ‘50s. The newspaper was known for its daring reporting on such topics as racism within the Los Angeles Police Department.
In 1946, Lomax won the Wendell L. Willkie Awards for Negro Journalism prize for a column that confronted a stereotype of Black men. Her activism was exercised beyond her newspaper reporting and extended to the 1952 Democratic National Convention where she was a delegate. Lomax also led movie boycotts for films that she deemed represented Black Americans poorly.

Still, in 1956 with the civil rights movement underway, the consummate journalist traveled to Montgomery, Alabama to report on the bus boycott. Later, after her divorce in 1960, Ms. Lomax ended The Los Angeles Tribune, packed up her children and moved to Alabama where she began a short-lived newspaper in Tuskegee. Her reporting on the bus boycott and many issues that plagued Black Americans garnered the attention of such dignitaries as Langston Hughes and Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.
We'd like to share additional resources for those interested in learning more about how resistance and social movements are documented. These resources include not only academic institutions but also grassroots groups since much of this innovative and necessary work is being done at the community level.

- Archiving Student Activism Toolkit by Project STAND:
  https://standarchives.com/project-stand-toolkit/
  ○ Compiles information on documenting, collecting, and providing access to student activism collections in archives.

- Witness: See it, Film it, Change it
  https://library.witness.org/product-tag/protests/
  ○ A library of free resources for video activists, trainers, and their allies.
• By Any Means Necessary: Documenting Black Protest in the Schomburg Center:
  https://libguides.nypl.org/ByAnyMeansNecessary/
  Home
  ○ Researchers are encouraged to use this research guide to navigate archival and secondary source materials that document the history of Black Protest housed at the Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture.

• The Blackivist's Five Tips for Organizers, Protestors, and Anyone Documenting Movements https://sixtyinchesfromcenter.org/the-blackivists-five-tips-for-organizers-protestors-and-anyone-documenting-movements/○ 5 quick tips to keep in mind as we work together to protect our collective documentation that proves we are here, addressing and safeguarding our people and communities.
- Preserve The Baltimore Uprising Archive Project

  http://baltimoreuprising2015.org/

  - A people's archive to preserve and make accessible original content captured and created by individual community members, grassroots organizations, and witnesses to protests responding to police brutality.

- A People's Archive of Police Violence in Cleveland

  https://www.archivingpoliceviolence.org/

  - Collects, preserves, and shares the stories, memories, and accounts of police violence as experienced or observed by Cleveland citizens.

- Defend Our Movements: Digital Self-Defense Knowledgebase

  - A web-based clearinghouse of the most up-to-date and useful information about protecting your devices and data—whether on the Internet, through cell phone communications, or in your home or office.
• Interference Archive:
  https://interferencearchive.org/
  ○ An open stacks archival collection featuring publications, a study center, and public programs including exhibitions, workshops, talks, and screenings, all of which encourage critical and creative engagement with the rich history of social movements.

• The Freedom Archives:
  https://freedomarchives.org/
  ○ A non-profit educational archive located in San Francisco dedicated to the preservation and dissemination of historical audio, video, and print materials documenting progressive movements and culture from the 1960s to the 1990s.